Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a mobile terminal, a control method thereof, and a storage medium, and particularly relates to a mobile terminal, a control method thereof, and a storage medium for displaying a plurality of viewpoints. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, a stereoscopic image is displayed by using stereoscopic images of two viewpoints (e.g., Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 2007-110912, Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 2008-100211, and Japanese Laid-open Patent Publication No. 2008-275206). When displaying stereoscopic images, a user can view an image with depth by using a pair of polarized glasses or shutter glasses. In the pair of polarized glasses, two polarized glasses having the same polarity are used. In the shutter glasses, images of two viewpoints are alternately displayed to be superimposed, and a stereoscopic image is displayed by making the user wear the shutter glasses to change between the images. In addition, in recent years, a terminal equipped with a camera has been used. For example, it is possible to view a stereoscopic image on a liquid crystal display (LCD) by using a camera mounted on a terminal. Such a terminal is called a mobile terminal. the HPA axis and the resultant increase in GC secretion. In the LH/ICV-infused animals, the inability to upregulate neurogenesis with stress may have resulted in increased HPA axis activity. The enhanced neurogenesis with stress in the LH/ICV-infused animals may have served to mitigate the effect of stress, since the GCs, when acting in combination with the LH, may have acted to reduce the stress response. The observed change in HPA axis activity may also explain the failure of the LH to stimulate neurogenesis in the absence of stress, since the
