The moon will appear much bigger and brighter than normal. "The Earth's atmosphere refracts and reflects the light of a full moon, making it look bigger and brighter," NASA said in a statement. A full moon is often called a blood moon, because in the past, it appears as red as blood in a dark sky. This is not the first time the moon has appeared much bigger and brighter than expected. The moon was also super-bright in April 2015 and November 2012. The easiest way to watch the moon appear bigger and brighter is to wear the right glasses. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration says normal viewing glasses will not help with the larger and brighter moon. Viewers will also see some meteor showers. The peak of the Perseid meteor shower is predicted to be from the night of May 21 to the early morning of May 22. More particularly, the present invention relates to an electron-emitting device with stable cold cathode characteristics and a method for producing the same. Conventional electron-emitting devices are roughly classified into two types. One type uses thermionic cathode heating, and the other type uses cold cathode heating. The electron-emitting devices which use cold cathode heating are classified as a field emission type (hereafter abbreviated as "FE type"), a metal/insulator/metal type (hereafter abbreviated as "MIM type"), a metal/insulator/semiconductor/insulator/metal type (here 570a42141b
