The Times of India (TOI) has launched an initiative to create awareness about what is killing young Indians. The campaign, which is being launched under the banner, 'Talking to India', is a week-long series which will document how young Indians are committing suicide and what drives them to take their own life. The campaign is in line with the WHO's Suicide Prevention Initiative, which seeks to reduce the global suicide rate by 10 per cent. In the first article under this series, TOI Delhi spoke to experts to understand the issue. "People who think about suicide take a step. It can't be explained why or how. It is like jumping off a cliff. People take that final step when they feel they have given up everything," says Dr Rajesh Kotecha, Chairman and

Managing Director, Sahara Hospitals. Suicide is a complex issue. It involves many factors, but one of the biggest barriers is that people are reluctant to speak about it, even if they know someone close to them is suicidal. Talking about it, and supporting people who are struggling with mental health issues, can be challenging. "People who are suicidal are very vulnerable and sensitive people. They need your empathy, understanding and support," says Dr Kotecha. The objective of the campaign, which will take up seven different articles, is to spread awareness about what are the common reasons that lead to suicide among young Indians. The ultimate goal is to reduce the suicide rate by raising the awareness and creating an enabling environment for 77a5ca646e
