The effect of deoxyglucose on mitochondrial adenylate nucleotides (AMP, ADP, and ATP) in beef heart has been investigated. The deoxyglucose inhibits the pentose phosphate pathway, consequently, AMP is accumulated to about twice the normal value in the deoxyglucose-treated mitochondria. Because AMP is a positive regulator for the oxidative phosphorylation, the inhibition of adenylate nucleotides accumulation by deoxyglucose would induce an arrest of the mitochondrial functions, which would lead to an irreversible damage of the mitochondrial membrane. The inhibition of adenylate nucleotides accumulation was also reversed by exogenous AMP, which was injected prior to deoxyglucose treatment. Similarly, an injection of AMP for short periods of time protects the mitochondria against the damage induced by deoxyglucose. These results suggest that the above recovery is related to the increase in the fluidity of the mitochondrial membrane.Press Releases BANFIELD, IL — Headquartered in the Chicagoland area, Cardinal Performance Technologies, Inc.
