A software plug-in is a software program that works with or interacts with another application, such as Windows, OS X, or Linux, but does not have an independent installation. Examples include Apple's Facetime, Facebook's Messenger app, and Instagram's Camera Roll. In some cases, as with Skype, the plug-in itself may be free, while the application it works with is not. The use of plug-ins or widgets is a way to add information or functionality to an application. Widgets provide an intuitive way to add information to the desktop environment. Widgets, including icons and features, can be created and added to the desktop environment of any application or browser by an application developer. For example, an application developer might create a widget that displays the user's contact list, or the status of the user's email. Widgets can be used to enhance the functionality of the desktop environment, depending on the operating system and application. For instance, in Mac OS X and Microsoft Windows, widgets can be created and placed on the desktop. In iOS and Android, however, widgets can be created to be placed in widgets. An interactive widget is an application that runs in a browser, and has features that allow a user to interact with that application. For example, the ability to preview or download files from within a browser. A streaming service is an Internet-based radio or video service that plays one or more continuous media streams, for example, music, television, or radio. For example, Internet radio stations stream content to a computer connected to the Internet using a radio player. Online music streaming services may play music online from a digital music library and allow users to listen to it on-demand or download it for offline listening. Some also allow users to upload their music library to the service. Online music streaming services include:

- Apple Music: Apple Music (launched in June 2015, currently available in the United States, United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and Germany) is an on-demand, cloud-based subscription streaming music service for Apple devices. It includes the radio stations Apple Music, Beats 1, and Beats 1 Live, on-demand streaming of individual albums and songs, and a podcasting component. The service is available as an app for Android, Windows, and iOS, and as a browser-based application on the Web.
- Spotify: Spotify (launched in
