Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.1.1) (Latest)

Tip When you're on the road with your camera, be sure to set your camera to a resolution that's close to the native size of a print you intend to make. It's hard to tell how the image you take with a 35mm lens will print out. Shoot at 60 or 100, or get as close as you can to the native size of a print you're intending to make. Figure 21.2. You can crop and manipulate your image with a tool called Content-Aware Move and Content-Aware Fill. Here a number of small fixes have been made to the edges of the image to make it easier to work with.

Intel VRNow VR Starter Kit Ships to Developers Today, Intel announced a new developer version of its VR platform, which the company is calling Intel VRNow. VRNow is a bare-bones kit that allows developers to get started with their own VR apps — just as an Archos 1010, which also recently announced a version of its own platform, VRNow, did several years ago. VRNow is meant to give developers a way to create apps that work well on mobile devices, including smartphones, tablets, and other small form-factor devices. Intel says VRNow is also designed to give devs a way to test their apps on VR headsets, which will be arriving as early as this year. Intel has promised to support OSVR, the open source VR platform for these types of devices, but VRNow has no software requirements. The Intel VRNow Developer Kit includes a VR headset, two wireless controllers, and two 3D tools, which are powered by Intel's RealSense technology. The headset itself is from the company's own RealSense-powered VR camera. Both of the controllers are based on Microsoft's Kinect. RealSense, which Intel acquired back in 2011, is an advanced depth-sensing camera that lets the company track the player's hands in a virtual space, as well as its face and body. The developer kit also includes a Virtual Reality Studio, which let's devs design and build immersive apps. These apps will be fully compatible with the Oculus Rift, which is one of the first Oculus-certified headsets to ship later this year. Intel VRNow is similar to both Oculus Rift and Sony's Morpheus from a cost perspective. Intel is selling its own VR headset for $60, and the two controllers, which are just small dongles, will cost $30 each. Samsung's Gear VR headset, which is Oculus Rift-certified, costs $99.99, and Sony's Morpheus costs $600. Intel's Morpheus is set to be released later this year, and it's got many of the same capabilities as the Oculus Rift, including several different view options and support for hand controllers. Oculus will also be releasing a new developer kit later this year, which is similar to the Morpheus experience. It's important to note that these early VR platforms don't have much more than sensor tech. They

(CNN) Sen. Bernie Sanders addressed the critical issue of income inequality in America Thursday, noting that it is "a major factor, a major factor" in Donald Trump's startling victory in the presidential race. "We had a very poor night last night. We had an election in Wisconsin that I think for the most part, was an anti-establishment election," Sanders told CNN's Don Lemon in an interview on "CNN Tonight." "In that election, there was a huge upset." Sanders cited the overwhelming Democratic majorities in the states of Michigan, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania, and argued that Trump's victory is a result of the large number of "people who are angry and frustrated." "Trump said that if he was given the chance to run his businesses, he would run them better than anybody else. And I think we have to recognize, that in many of these states, particularly in Pennsylvania, Trump ran almost 100 percent negative ads, going after the Democratic candidate," Sanders said. "We have to start recognizing that there are a lot of people in this country who are hurting. And we got to do everything we can to make sure that they can be lifted out of the hole, not pushed down further into the hole." Sanders' comments come as Democrats for the first time are beginning to discuss the general election. Clinton campaign manager Robby Mook said that Sanders' remarks on Thursday night showed "a lot of ground work for what is going to be his general election campaign." "It's a fair criticism. It's a fact of political life in America today and it's unfortunate that Mr. Trump heard a large number of his supporters with a lot of hostility, and he channeled that into votes and a win," Mook told CNN's Kate Bolduan in a call Friday morning. While many Republicans, including Trump himself, have floated the idea of the GOP's infrastructure spending beleaguered by the current government shutdown as a way to address income inequality, Sanders does not embrace the comparison. "He's got a different view," Sanders told Lemon. "For me, the infrastructure of our country, the roads, the bridges, the airports, it's got to be all for the kids in our country. And I think it's a fair criticism to say that if you are watching TV and you are looking at ads and you see Trump, you see Trump over and over again, you see ads -- and basically saying we're going to build a wall and Mexico is going
