Concussions are an all too common problem. They start with a bump and they may seem harmless but behind each bruise, the brain is in danger. There are sports you are more likely to get a concussion, boxing and martial arts are the main culprits but it could happen playing basketball, football or volleyball. If someone is experiencing concussion signs and symptoms, they may have dazed or dizzy spells, headaches and / or sensitivity to light, and / or nausea, vomiting and / or loss of balance. Not all concussion symptoms last long. The earliest signs are usually a headache and muscle stiffness. A light concussion may only last for a short time, a severe concussion can last a few weeks. In the longer term the person may have headaches, depression and / or behavioural problems. It's not uncommon for people to forget how they felt when they first got concussed. If you don't realise that your child is concussed, they will be able to play, as the headaches and muscle

PHP memory management I'm new to PHP and have been teaching myself as I go along. I've been trying to implement the following: `'; } ?>` As you can see, the script does nothing other than write a line to the page every second (I've moved the first echo just to make a point). Here's what I got: I can't seem to understand why in the second execution, microtime() overflows and I'm getting this error: PHP Warning: microtime(): Second argument is not an array in /home/user/ e79caf774b
