Am I ready to jump on the iPhone bandwagon? I know that it has a lot of good tools on board. I know that this is probably the ultimate toolset for professional photographers. I know I will have to wait for the capabilities that are currently being worked on. I don't think I will have any trouble making the switch. My biggest concern is the price. $10 to $12 a month seems like a lot for "free" editing... especially for not Adobe's shopping cart is now off-line, so you can't see the prices of everything in the catalog. However, whatever the price, I think this version is worth the wait. If I do get Adobe Creative Cloud in its entirety, I think I'll become a full member. Thanks to the new release, all three of my applications (Photoshop, Lightroom and InDesign) will be complete at the same time. Also, the newest Lightroom updates include a new live gradient expression feature that you can find under the panel in the menu bar. This lets you choose between four preset gradient options, which offer related results if you use them on an image. Consider using it! But this update changes it. By using the One Click Fill and Adjust dialog, you can change the preview as well. You will no longer see that orange or red hot spot. The green area will preview the correct, edited picture. Adobe Camera RAW now allows you to make custom adjustments to your pictures directly from Adobe Lightroom. So if you want to make adjustments like correcting exposure, changing contrast, and changing the color look of your picture, you can do it in Lightroom and save them to the RAW file.
